Business Description

Fig is the fruit of a tree called Ficus Carica, which is cultivated in many tropical regions. There are about 600 types of figs among which Brown and Black Turkey Figs are the most demanded in the market. Since the ripe fruit cannot be kept safe for a long time or even transported without damage to its health, most productions are done in dried and processed forms. Figs can be eaten fresh or dried or processed into jam, rolls, biscuits, and other types of desserts. In addition, fig vinegar is tasty and can be used with salads and pickles.

Among the dried fig producers, Turkey takes the first rank, with a production of 306 thousand tons per year. Egypt, Morocco, and Algeria take the second to fourth, with a production of 189, 128, and 109 thousand tons per year.
